Their spell binding tales of past and present spirits will entertain young and old!

Colonial Spirits at Dick House

St. George's Church and Cemetery

This approximate 90 minute all outdoor experience is packed full of tales that will have you looking over your shoulder, not to mention—leave chills up and down your spine! From its beginnings as a Native American community, to a bustling port city, to home of some of our nation's founding leaders, Fredericksburg has seen many people live and die here. Meet some of the ones who died here...but never left!

Stop 1 - Fredericksburg Visitor Center — Starting point for this tour.

Stop 2 - The Chimneys - Now a popular restaurant, this building holds many souls. From the 1770's until present day, spirits have claimed this location as their home. From the girl whose piano solo quickly became a duet to a young lad's tragic death...the "Chimneys" awaits your arrival.

Stop 3 - The Richard Johnston Inn — Treated for his wounds in the building when it served as a civil war hospital, hear the heartbreaking tale of one young Confederate soldier who still resides in the inn's attic!

Stop 4 - Rising Sun Tavern — From the days the founding fathers gathered inside, there are souls who have never left! Will the first tavern keeper, John Frazier, make his presence known? He and his wife Elizabeth still like to greet visitors—even though they have been dead some 200 years! Those who work here know they are NOT alone!

Stop 5 - St. George's Church and Cemetery -- The oldest cemetery in the city, resting place of some of it's founding fathers and with a connection to George Washington and John Paul Jones, you are most likely to catch orbs or even a ghostly figure on your camera here! Since the first stone was laid and first burial plot dug, St. George's has been an integral part of Fredericksburg's haunted history. It served as a hospital during the horrendous civil war battles that took place within a 20 mile radius of the city. Listening to the city's police reports to a young choir member's experience in the cemetery, you will want to huddle closer to your tour companions....

Stop 6 - The Blue Lady of Charlotte St -- Will your group be the lucky one to perhaps catch a glimpse of this mysterious spirit? Why is she called the "Blue Lady"? What was her tragic fate?
